Active triage

The active triage process in our accident & emergency (A&E) department is set up to assess and treat children with urgent and emergency conditions; the range of routine tests and investigations is limited in this department.

Why do we do this?
Active triage is a check to see who needs to be seen urgently today for treatment and who would be better seen at another time in one of our regular clinics or by a community optometrist/optician. This means that if children need emergency care in A&E they will have a shorter wait to receive treatment because the department will not be so full. Any child needing less urgent care can be seen and treated in a booked clinic with all the tests available or directed to the best place to be assessed.

How does this affect my child?
When you come to the children’s A&E in Moorfields, your child will be assessed by a triage-trained nurse who will decide which option can provide the best care for them today.

- If your child has an urgent eye problem this will most likely mean immediate treatment today.
- If your child does not require emergency eye care one of the following options will apply:
  - You will either be given an appointment date for a clinic before you leave or be sent an appointment in one of our clinics best suited for your child’s needs.
  - We will recommend that your child has a standard eye test with a community optometrist (‘high street optician’). If there are any issues, the optometrist will be able to refer you on to the hospital eye service.
  - We will recommend that your child see their GP for referral to your local eye clinic.

Your child’s records will also be checked by a senior paediatric eye doctor and if any change in plan is required we will be in touch.
